Condé Systems & Unisub™ Substrates

Condé Systems supports Unisub™ substrates for sublimation imprinting because of qualities that exceed our client expectations. Unisub has a long history of product development inspired by the needs of the digital imprinting industry. We are confident we can count on Unisub to continue to bring the same attention to detail, quality processes, and outstanding value to their products and future offerings.

Unisub is specifically formulated for sublimation and is the standard of excellence for the sublimation industry. It is manufactured in a manner that gives you the same vibrant colors on each and every one of its 300 products. You do not have to change your heat, temperature, and pressure settings very much to achieve consistent and vibrant full color results. No more fuzzy imprints means that your graphics are always sharp and crystal clear. This saves you time and aggravation making Unisub the easiest product to use. It is also more scratch resistant than other products. This is very important because it helps to protect your finished work in the shop so you do not have to make it again in case you mishandle it badly and scratch it's surface. Unisub also has the best fade resistance. This means that your products containing a customer's treasured memories and achievements last longer for them in their home or office.

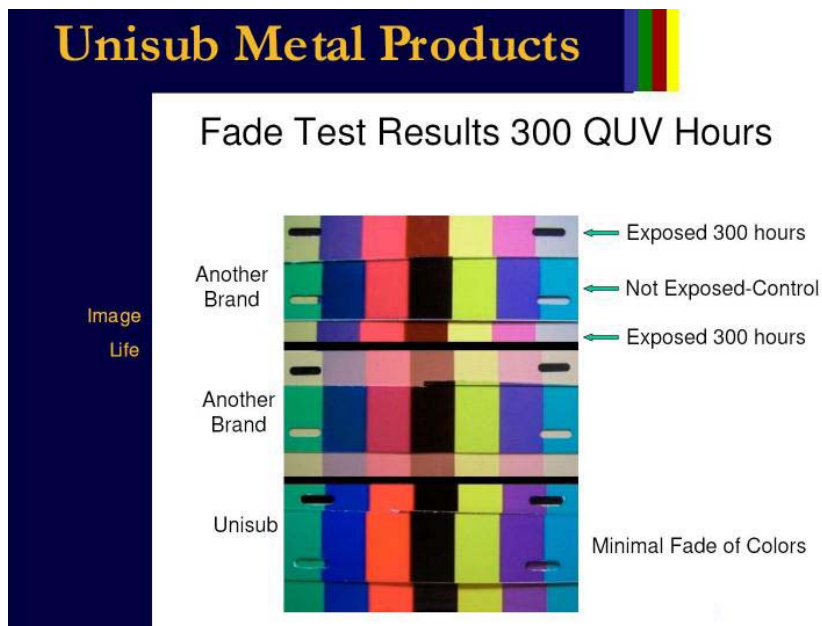

A variety of tests and measures have been consulted to prove the superiority of Unisub coatings and substrates. For example, Unisub white aluminum sheet stock and jewelry items were tested for fade resistance with sublimation ink. Two other brands were similarly exposed. After 300 hours of exposure, Unisub metals showed the least amount of fading:

Unisub has a long history of product development inspired by the needs of the sublimation imprinting industry. We are confident we can count on Unisub to continue bringing the same attention to detail, quality processes, and outstanding value to their products and future offerings.

Crazing

There are various causes of surface crazing, but most results from sharp impacts or accidental damage. Unisub's superior hard coating is resistant to crazing and good product packing helps keep the substrates in near pristine condition, resulting in an excellent surface for sublimation transfer of images.

Throughput Matched With Quality

Working with evenly coated sublimation substrates has additional values besides the delight of the future client who has his grandmother's image added to a clock face. During holidays, production time becomes scarce as the orders overcome the best-equipped shops. Having reliable products mean less time wasted, as well as ink and the substrates. The disappointment of a client whose gift item cannot be produced on time is negative for your shop's reputation as well as your employee and personal morale. But what a coup to present the customer with an eye-popping, obviously well made item that will become an heirloom for his family in the future. You can count on Unisub to deliver substrates that achieve desired results.

The Hoffman Scratch Test

The Hoffman Scratch Test is a test on metal with a weighted tool. The scratching tool is a sharp edged, hardened steel cylinder with its axis at an angle of 45 degrees to the plane of the film. This cylinder is attached to the lever arm, and varying the position of the weight on the lever varies the load.

Unisub's sublimation coatings are simply pleasing to the eye, in comparison with other brands; the unsublimated coatings appear thicker and richer, after the imaging process is applied, the finished product has more vibrancy and life. Photos are reproduced faithfully and colors jump out at the viewer, reminding us all of what makes sublimation the breakthrough industry application.
